Group or Ungroup layers The Layers panel is divided into separate groups. Each group is made up of layers that appear in the Layers panel but are not currently selected. To move a group of layers around, move the layer thumbnail. This moves all the layers in the group. However, before you start playing with the layers in the Layers panel, you must first `_ungroup_` the layers. The best place to do this is while you're still in the Layer dialog box. Simply click the Unite button to put each layer in its own group, or click the Group button to return to the state where all the layers are selected in one group. The entire process of creating layers and grouping them together is called creating a `_layer group_`. When you're finished grouping your layers, you can always get back to the way things were by deselecting all the layers at once.

There are a number of features in Photoshop Elements that are not available in Photoshop. It is possible to map Photoshop Elements to your keyboard shortcuts using the Keymap tab (View > Keymap) but this is not entirely reliable. Every application comes with its own installation setup process which we have discussed in-depth in a previous post here. If you have an existing PSD file you would like to quickly open in Photoshop Elements, you should use one of the many tools available to convert a PSD file to Adobe Pixelmator. You can also directly open a PSD file in Photoshop Elements by using the Open as > Photostyler DPI Image option. If you run into problems then you can also use this tool to convert a PSD to JPG (or JPEG), PSD to PNG, or PSD to GIF. When opening a file you should remember that Photoshop Elements has only 10MB of RAM available at a time and is limited to a relatively slow 10MB of hard disk space. As with Photoshop Elements 10 you can increase the size of these limits by enabling the software to run as a 32-bit application. Photoshop Elements: Importing and Exporting The best way to import images into Photoshop Elements is by using the Photoshop file format (.PSD) for your photos. You can also use the GIF, JPEG, PNG or even the EMF formats but Photoshop Elements supports these formats much more slowly. You can also import a variety of other images into Photoshop Elements including; SVG, Illustrator and PDF files. These formats can be converted to Photoshop for editing but this is fairly slow and quite often it is quicker to simply open the file in the normal graphics editor. Although Adobe has now deprecated support for the Mac OS classic Apple system files, you can still import and export files using the following formats: .PSB (Photoshop Bible) – Photoshop file for editing e.g. PSB, PSD and PSBX. The .PSB file is normally designed for Photoshop Elements and cannot be opened by Photoshop. .DSP (VectorWorks) – Digital Photo Professional file for editing. (This was used for Illustrator and Fireworks until Photoshop CS4 but is now obsolete.) .PSK (Keyword) – Photoshop file for editing e.g. .PSK for Photoshop Elements .PBK (Photoshop Browser) – Similar to .PSB files, used for editing. a681f4349e

Q: Get data from MySQL query result to JavaScript Object I have a query result such as below: $query = mysql_query("SELECT * FROM users "); while($row = mysql_fetch_array($query)) { $name = $row['username']; $lat = $row['lat']; $lon = $row['lon']; $year = $row['year']; $month = $row['month']; $day = $row['day']; $time = $row['time']; $count = $row['count']; $object[] = $name; $object[] = $lat; $object[] = $lon; $object[] = $year; $object[] = $month; $object[] = $day; $object[] = $time; $object[] = $count; } Im trying to save this data to a JavaScript object like below: var newObj = { 'data': $object }; But i get the following error: Error: object is not a function How can i save the data into this JS object? A: var newObj = { 'data': $object }; This line of code is a bit odd. You are defining newObj as an object. Then you try to assign $object to data. There is no real data property in JavaScript. You should use an array: var newObj = [{ 'data': $object }, { 'data': $object }, { 'data': $object }]; Or if you want to use an object, you need to do something like the following: var newObj = {}; newObj.data = $object; Which is essentially what you're trying to do. Next month, the U.S. Supreme Court is scheduled to hear oral arguments in Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission. The case, combined with a June 9 deadline to comply with Colorado's Public Accommodation Law, has people across the country wondering whether they can order a cake for a special occasion. Although their cases often begin with seemingly mundane facts — a business owners must decide whether to bake a wedding cake for a gay couple — several courts have already highlighted some of the legal complexities involved with serving the
