Structural Elastography: A Prerequisite for Validation of Elastographic Methodologies in Animal Models of Oral Soft Tissue Diseases. Various instrument-based elastographic methods have been introduced in the last few years, and successful validation in humans is underway. However, these methods have never been adapted in models for the investigation of oral soft tissue diseases, mainly due to anatomical differences between the human and animal mouth and to the difficulties of establishing precise measurements in an operational point in a mouth. We propose structural elastography as a prerequisite for validation of elastographic methods in oral soft tissue, in animal models of oral diseases. In our study, we validated a structural elastographic system using an existing ex vivo soft tissue model based on fresh cow tongue specimens, and demonstrated their feasibility for direct measurements in the oral cavity. The results showed a feasibility of direct, real-time measurements of biomechanical properties in oral soft tissue. Markus Faul Markus Faul (born 1 May 1963) is a German bobsledder. Humberto Maturana (1893-1980) was born in Buenos Aires. Book consists of two appendices. On the other hand, I do not see this as a particularly interesting application for an AI. I did not find all that convincing the "biologist's" arguments.. Early in the book, he says that he "speaks," "stops," and "invents", but he says that this is because it is all he knows. I found no real basis for his own knowledge. He seems more like a pretend-AI who hasn't really asked the right questions.. But then, you could argue that other people think "language" is all it takes to be intelligent, so it's not a very good test... The introductory chapters are largely to be read in conjunction with Maturana.. The second half of the book is a surprisingly short list of systems:.. Anyways, this seems like a fun way to do it. Anybody have any experience with this? PS: Multiple colourings would be great, if you can.
