Player and manager movement will feature enhanced physics, with players now reacting naturally to tackles and the ball. Dribbling will also become more fluent and intuitive, with players reacting to the forces of the game. Real-life physicality is at the core of FIFA 22's player control. Player control has been revised from top to bottom, with subtle improvements in movements that make the player feel more responsive on the pitch. Players also react more naturally to the ball, and intelligent, natural agent behaviours allow them to vary their style and play according to the situation on the pitch. Gameplay has been enhanced in several areas. The most obvious is the ball. The ball on FIFA 22 feels more dynamic than ever before. It responds to the weight of the player and features more realistic aerodynamics. Players feel more connected to the ball, with the weight, body and trajectory all contributing to a more lively experience. Players have better control of the ball when they take control, with the ball behaviour in flight more realistic. • Players more easily find the balance point between individual and team performance. Players possess greater control over their options and feel more in control when they're on the ball. Players also move more naturally and freely, away from the touchline and towards the ball.
