Birmingham, Alabama is next in line to be fitted with the latest traffic calming technology. The city is completing installation of the Beemer SmartSight, which will replace a small network of existing traffic calming measures that were installed in 2002. The update is part of a wider study to determine the most effective and least expensive way to control speed in the city. According to the city, the SmartSight system allows drivers to use an electronic device (e.g., smartphone or tablet computer) to access a pre-downloaded data module, which displays a map of the location, the speed limit, and other safety-related information. The data module will also act as a speedometer that will tell the driver when they're traveling too fast. "Research has proven over and over again that one of the most cost-effective and successful ways to reduce accident rates and road deaths is to slow down drivers," said Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner Richard McDaniel, in a statement. "The Beemer SmartSight is a new and innovative method of traffic calming that provides an easy way for police to identify dangerously fast traffic." The district which includes the city of Birmingham and part of Jefferson County approved the funding for the SmartSight project in February 2018, when it added $1 million to its capital improvements budget. The city anticipates completing the system in the next five weeks. Difference in the superimposition effects of spatial frequency on visual acuity in myopic and hyperopic eyes. The differences in visual acuity of myopic eyes and hyperopic eyes under different superimposition conditions of spatial frequency (SF) were investigated. From a total of 122 patients, 50 with myopia (mean 0.85 diopters) and 42 with hyperopia (mean 1.1 diopters), the cases were divided into two groups based on refractive errors. The groups had equal distribution with respect to laterality of eyes and age. Visual acuity was determined monocularly for each of the eyes under 11 conditions (11 SFs from 2.1 to 28.1 cpd) with an eccentricity of 5 degrees at the best visual acuity under binocular viewing. It was also determined in the monocular condition with 11 SFs from 2.1 to 28.1 cpd in a trial to examine the factor of SF. The visual acuity of myopic eyes was significantly poorer than that of hyperopic eyes under monocular viewing, while the difference was not significant under binocular viewing. In the monocular condition, there were no differences in visual acuity between myopic and hyperopic eyes for any SF. A correlation was observed between refractive error and visual acuity under monocular viewing, with SF and between refractive error and visual acuity in the monocular condition with the lowest SF. A significant correlation was observed between refractive error and visual acuity in binocular viewing, with SF or in the monocular condition with the lowest SF. The results indicated that the spatial resolution capability of eyes with myopia was poorer than that of hyperopic eyes. It was also suggested that the SF at which visual acuity was measured in the monocular condition may have an important influence on the difference in visual acuity between myopic and hyperopic eyes.Q: Is it possible to create and save PDF files from within a Shiny app without user interaction?
