This proposal for a K08 Mentored Patient-Oriented Research Career Development Award is a novel application to support the candidate in the successful development as a clinical and research psychologist. As a result of an undergraduate research project, she has pursued a program in Clinical Psychology, graduated and received a Master's degree in Clinical Psychology, and is completing her doctorate in Clinical Psychology. This K08 award will support the candidate's continued development as a clinical and research psychologist, enable her to become an independent investigator in the understanding and treatment of compulsive gambling, and enable her to extend this work into the broader and more general field of addictive behaviors. The proposed research plan represents a unique program of independent mentored research in the areas of cognitive and behavioral treatment for pathological gambling. The five specific aims of the proposal are to: (1) develop and refine procedures for treating pathological gambling, (2) demonstrate the effectiveness of these procedures in two controlled clinical trials, (3) evaluate the role of cognitive processes in mediating treatment response, (4) identify cognitive vulnerabilities and mechanisms that predict recurrence and relapse, and (5) investigate change over time in cognitive and affective processes related to treatment outcome. The training program has three major components. First, a didactic series that includes coursework in cognitive-behavioral intervention, a program of supervised clinical experience, and weekly supervision by three mentors. Second, a program of peer-reviewed mentored research. Third, participation in a weekly seminar series with the candidate's mentors and other members of the University of Pittsburgh Department of Psychology. This proposed research, proposed by an independent investigator with a strong record of successful research and publication in the area of pathological gambling, represents a unique, high-quality learning experience for the candidate. In addition to the specific research planned for this award, it should provide the candidate with the skills necessary to initiate new lines of research in clinical psychology. This series of tabletop reports are now available in several languages. Please check the literature tab for more information. A rapidly developing line of work in developmental psychology has emerged that suggests that the stress response in children is immature and may contribute to the pathogenesis of childhood disorders. The focus of the work stems from an appreciation of the importance of stress during brain development, some of the difficulties that young children have understanding their biopsychosocial situation and the opportunities children have to influence it. Glory Foods (Ireland) Glory Foods is a cookie factory in Cork owned by Kerry Group and now fully owned by Baker Perkins. The production of cookies is a family tradition in Ireland, with grandparents and parents of the factory's workforce starting as apprentices at the factory in the 1920s. The factory is located near the village of Disheroon, County Cork, Ireland. It is the base of operation for the West Cork manufacturing plant of the company. In 1980, the factory was bought by the Irish entrepreneur Gerry Sherman, who turned it into the largest single-brand cookie firm in Ireland. It became the largest cookie company in Ireland and one of the biggest in the world. After being bought by John Moroney, the American-born coffee millionaire, in 1995, the factory decided to make cookies only for two years instead of six. The company's largest rival is Bewley's, part of the Irish Bewleys group.
