Serious Sam 3 Multiplayer Crack V3030rar.Q: Formula for index of smaller element in array Is there a formula for the index of the smallest element in an array? Like $f(5) = 3$ for $\{1, 5, 9, 6, 8\}$? A: You can use the built-in cell function min to find the minimum of an array, and then use the offset function to offset the given row by one to get the first row that contains the minimum, e.g. $=\text{MIN}(\text{OFFSET}(\$B\$1,\text{ROW}(A1)-1,0,5))$ This works as Excel stores the first non-empty value in the first column that starts with the first non-empty value in the second column and so on. In case you want to use this to determine the element from the array with the smallest number you can combine the above with the INDEX function which will give you the location of the smallest element in the array. (I.e. place the above in the first cell and copy the formula down in the required cells. Ask HN: How are you tracking bugs? - e1ven Right now I'm all about trying to track down bugs on the client side. I'm using Google Chrome, and visiting the site in a private browser to try to catch things. I've got a list of about 30 of these, and from that I can build good assumptions on what you see on the client side. I send these bugs to the dev-team, but I thought I'd see if anyone on here had some great tools or techniques that they use. ===== unshift if you're on os x, it's a pretty painless process with launchd. you can have it create a new domain per-user with very granular settings so you don't have to muck around with system-wide settings. it creates a plist that maps the domain to a script that tests against your user's chrome extension config, and if it fails, you're alerted of an issue. i've talked about this setup here:
