
Linux Egalax Touch Screen Driver

the touch screen driver does not recognize the event when you press the spacebar. i don't know why it does not work, but if you have this problem, you will need to create a shortcut to a program that will detect the spacebar and start the calibration. you can make a shortcut for this in the applications > other > keyboard shortcuts window in ubuntu. or you can make a udev rule. there are several programs that detect the spacebar. i have made a shortcut for one in my ~/.config/autostart/ folder that i use, but you can find others using google. when you are calibrating, the touch screen will go through several different stages. first, the display will go through a series of fade-in/fade-out transitions. you will notice that after each transition the xorg driver gets back to a stable state and the cursor will behave normally. the initial state that you start with is not a normal state, it's just to give the screen time to stabilize. you will see a progress indicator at the bottom right corner and you have to wait until the calibration is complete. once it is, the progress indicator will disappear and the final calibration state will be shown. if the calibration is successful, then you will have a green bar at the bottom right corner of your screen. if it is not successful, then the bar will be red. the next time you press the fn key, you will see a green calibration bar. if it is not green, then you will need to perform the calibration manually. the calibration will be performed in the same way as the first time you start the calibration.
