For the first time, Photoshop users can capture World Press photo submissions, from any photographer, through the World Press Photo's brand new submissions portal. Photographers can now shoot an unlimited number of images per day for up to 10 days after being accepted into the World Press Photo editorial courts. After submitting their work to World Press Photo's website, submitted images are vetted by a team of 'editors' who review the quality of the image and determine if it is suitable for consideration. World Press Photo editors determine if images meet their criteria through e-mail review and regular meetings during which a $1,000 prize is awarded to the winner and ten runners-up receive 5,000 euro each. If we go to change the size of the images, we can easily do it. With the default option, we can select the size, the option to scale the image and then a zoom slider, which we can use to compare the sizes of different images. Photoshop enables us to use powerful tools and save time, and we can save the images automatically in the cloud. We can't talk about what's new in the Adobe software without taking a peek at some of the new features and updates being made to the content management system (CMS) in the Adobe Creative Cloud. Version 22.0 of the software made the release (a monthly update) and brought two new features:

- In-Place Crop
- Integrated Layer Trim
