Correction of retinal microcirculation abnormalities in diabetic retinopathy with inhibition of nitric oxide synthase. Nitric oxide (NO) is involved in various vascular and metabolic processes. A systemically applied NO synthase inhibitor, NG-nitro-L-arginine-methylester (L-NAME), is shown to be effective to inhibit the local production of NO in several experimental models of microcirculation. In the present study we investigated whether local inhibition of NO synthase by intracameral application of L-NAME would be effective to improve abnormalities of the vascular tone of the retina in diabetic rats. Newborn male Wistar rats were put on a 30% glucose diet and injected intraperitoneally with L-NAME (10 mg/kg/day) or equal volumes of NaCl from postnatal day 20 on. Half the rats from each group were killed on day 50 and the retinal microcirculation was assessed by intravital microscopy. After death, histological analysis was carried out on the eyes. In the diabetic rats, arteriolar diameters were significantly reduced to 51.1 +/- 2.5%
