Can you stop ransomware? Is that possible? Can you put a stop to it before it wreaks havoc on your business and your data? While ransomware infections are increasing at an alarming rate, there are things you can do to stop it. How do you stop ransomware? There are many things you can do to stop the spread of ransomware and stop the damage it causes. Backups Ensure you have a regular backup of all your data. When you are hit by ransomware, you will have the option of restoring to a previous backup or you can create a new backup and restore your data from there. You should make sure you can restore your backups easily and quickly to recover your data if your files are encrypted by a ransomware attack. Keep your software up-to-date Keep your operating system, browser and software applications up-to-date to stop exploits. Keep your data backed up regularly Ensure your data is regularly backed up to a location that is not on your computer or local device. Backing up your data can be as simple as plugging your external drive into your laptop and running a backup application. Do not open malicious files, attachments or email It is recommended you do not open any suspicious files, attachments or email. If you do, you could unknowingly open a virus or ransomware which will encrypt your data. Do not open email, download files from websites you do not trust or open attachments from unknown senders. Ransomware is just the latest virus to take over your computer. Make sure you are protected from these viruses. Protect your data Keep the right security software on your computer. You should also install a firewall and anti-malware software. Ensure your passwords are not easy to guess You should make your passwords long, complex and obscure. You should avoid passwords which are the same for different sites. Use a password manager to help you. Change your passwords on any social media accounts You should ensure you are not posting information which could compromise your privacy or the privacy of your business. Inform IT When you find a problem, contact your IT support team. Make sure you
